"Mort(e)" by Robert Repino is a fast-paced SF apocalyptic thriller where the animal kingdom, as led by an ancient Queen ant, rises up against the humans for dominion over the Earth. The book succeeds as an action story but fell flat for me as the social/satirical statement it is trying to be. Think George Orwell's "Animal Farm" combined with the film version of Robert Heinlein's "Starship ...

Robert Repino's Morte never stops moving, and it's such a cinematic, fast-paced adventure that we're willing to go along with the author's bizarre, complicated mythology. Expect to give your cat or dog some side-eye while you read, though. Repino's wild imagination has its base in the everyday behaviors of our pets.

The Quillery: Interview with Robert Repino, author of Mort ...

Robert Repino takes us on a fantastic, dreadful, hopeful, sci-fi journey with his original novel, "Mort(e)". In homage perhaps, with seeming reference, reverence and inspiration to and from Robert A. Heinleins "Starship Troopers", George Orwell's "Animal Farm" and H.G. Wells "War of the Worlds", the author's clever mash-up of these plots is unique and fascinating. The animals become humanly ...
